The effect of metformin on the immune response in non-alcoholic fatty liver disease. Alcohol is a major driver of liver disease, but other causes of liver disease such as diabetes, obesity, metabolic syndrome, and genetic factors are emerging as increasingly important. The liver is an important site of inflammation associated with these diseases, and immune cells are recruited to this site, potentially contributing to the liver damage. For example, innate immune cells such as natural killer (NK) cells have been implicated in the pathogenesis of non-alcoholic fatty liver disease (NAFLD) and other liver diseases, both by modulating liver function and by promoting hepatic inflammation and fibrosis. The liver is also an important site of metabolism and insulin resistance, and is therefore a major target for anti-diabetes agents such as the biguanides (BGs). Metformin is a widely used BG that is highly effective in reducing liver-related mortality in type 2 diabetes, but has also been shown to reduce liver injury in various models of liver disease. These BG effects on the liver are thought to be mediated primarily by the action of metformin on energy metabolism, but it is not known whether there are direct effects of metformin on liver immunity.1.
